The Patient Describes the Case. For Anyone who has had the Symptoms the Account will be Interesting.

From the Reporter, Cuyahoga Falls, Ohio.

One of the most beautiful of nature's lovely spots is the varied township of Tallmadge in Summit County, Ohio. Here are rolling, undulating hills and beautiful forest scenery; hill, wood and meadow spread their charming panorama before the eyes of the traveler and as he looks, he thinks, here is Arcadia, where one may live after nature's model in beautiful simplicity and revel in health and happiness.

Yet, even here in this Eden, where fruit and flowers and pastoral scenes warm the heart from the city and its turmoil, insidious disease steps in and destroys a Paradise. It was thus in a beautiful hillside home, surrounded by an orchard, with flower beds surrounding it, the cozy white house looks the abode of comfort. It is the home of E. J. Vance, who cultivates small fruits in summer and in winter plies the trade of broom maker. Blessed with a lovely wife, darling child and a pretty farm, an outsider might look in vain for the thorn hidden among the roses. But a few years ago this life became wretched when the father and husband was afflicted with what appeared to be an incurable malady. During the still, small hours of night when sleep and rest, twin blessings, hover over mankind, a terrible suffering would seize upon him; gradually the disease grew upon him, wasting his nervous system and clutching with cold fingers at heart and brain. This went on for a long time and friends saw no relief before him but the last sleep of death. But it is now all changed; freed from this overhanging heritage of illness, E. J. Vance is once more able to enjoy life, the comforts of home and the joys of family love. How it happened is recorded in the following interview:

"I had treated with so many physicians," said Mr. Vance, speaking of his recovery from the long time illness, "that I began to believe nothing could be done for me. I tried two doctors at the Falls and then spent a lot of money on specialists who made great boasts in Akron, but I grew no better."

"What did they say about you?" "My heart was affected. I suffered so severely with heart trouble that I wonder I lived to tell the tale. My wife was a nurse, I expected every time I had a bad spell, and that was nearly every night, that I should die. I grew so nervous I was well nigh insane."

"How then do you account for your present healthy condition? You certainly look very well now."

"When I was nearly distracted with the pain of my disease and my inability to get help, a boy came along and threw into my carriage a little pamphlet, advertising the merits of Dr. Williams' Pink Pills for Pale People. I thought I would try them but hesitated because I believed it could do no good; but that night I had a worse attack than usual, and as soon as I was able to get out I drove over to Cuyahoga Falls and bought the Pink Pills for Pale People at the drug store of F. F. Shaffer & Co."

"And the result?"

"I have never had another attack of the complaint."

"What was the nature of your disease?"

"Doctors named it variously, as asthma, goitre, nervous prostration and heart trouble."

"What did they call the disease?"

"Most of them said it was heart disease; two told me I had the worst form of heart disease, valvular disease of the heart, and assured me I could never be any better."

"How did it affect you?"

"THERE IS SCIENCE IN NEATNESS."

THE STURDY GREEKS.

NOT AFRAID TO BEARD THE UNSPEAKABLE TURK.

Political Conditions in the Courageous Little Kingdom—Sympathy For Crete and Hatred For Turkey Are Inborn in the Greek.

Spunky little Greece is just now the center of all eyes. Once more she has defied the Turk, her ancient enemy, and has signified her willingness to wipe the name of Turkey off the map. There is a large possibility that she would do this, too, if the other European powers would only keep their hands off. The ever present "eastern question," the nightmare of diplomats, would be knocked all askew, however, if this were to be allowed.

The situation in the eastern end of the Mediterranean is a somewhat complicated one. The island of Crete, which is a Turkish province, lies just south of Greece and was a part of the ancient Hellenic federation.

KING GEORGE OF GREECE.

Although it has been a part of the sultan's domain for 300 years, the Cretans are just as much Greeks today as they were 1,000 years ago. They have the same language and the same religion as the rest of Hellas, and they are anxious to become a part of the Greek kingdom.

Naturally the Greeks have unbounded sympathy for the Cretans. They themselves have been free from Turkish oppression for barely a generation, and the hatred of the Mussulman, which hundreds of years' bondage instilled in their hearts, is still as deep as if kept alive by present injustice. In recent years, too, the Greeks seem to have recovered something of their old martial spirit. The chief reason why their imported ruler, King George, is not highly popular, is that he does not share this spirit. He is a Dane by birth and has no inherited hatred for the Turk.

Then there are family reasons which have kept him from disturbing that sacred "eastern situation." If he were to embrace the European powers in an indiscriminate conflict, he would gain the hearty dislike of a score of royal relatives.

King George is a mild mannered, self possessed, middle aged man with a long mustache and a very bald head. When he was 8 years old, his father became king of Denmark, and when he was 18 he entered the Danish navy and served for several years there as an officer. He was enjoying himself very well as a prince when, in 1863, he was given an opportunity to become king of Greece. Prince Alfred of England and Duke Ernest of Saxe-Coburg had both declined the throne which King Otto had abdicated, but the young Danish prince accepted. It was an insignificant throne, but he ascended it, backed by the allied powers, and had only to keep his own people under control.

This has not been such an easy task after all. Greek political feeling runs very high at times, and not long ago there arose an occasion when King George must have wished himself well out of the country.

Trioupias and Delianis, the leaders of the rival parties, both refused to form a cabinet. The king tried all sorts of combinations, but nothing suited them. In despair the king decided that he must get along for awhile without a cabinet.

The scheme worked beautifully, and after awhile the sulky statesmen consented to return to business once more. Since then there has been less friction.

In the present crisis the king has undoubtedly been forced to act much against his will. It was not until about a year ago that he evinced any sympathy at all for the Cretans. Since then he has been steadily growing in popularity. On the question of helping Crete all Greece is united. When Prime Minister Delianis recently announced in the chamber of deputies that prompt and decisive action had been decided upon, the leader of the opposition assured the government of hearty support in the matter.

For many months past filibustering expeditions have been openly fitted out in Greek ports, and Greek vessels, laden with arms and ammunition for the Cretans, have sailed boldly away. Whole companies of soldiers from the Greek army have gone to Crete, and the government has made no attempt to stop them. For years Cretans who have been banished from their homes for killing Turkish soldiers have found refuge in Greece, where they have been well received and given such an sentiment as this what can a mere king do? Even his own son, Prince George, who, by the way, is the idol of all Greece, has long been one of the leading spirits of the pro-Crete party, and Greek enthusiasts know no bounds when he took command of the invading flotilla.

A RUSSIAN DIPLOMAT

COUNT MURAVIEFF, THE NEW MINISTER OF FOREIGN AFFAIRS.

Well Grounded in the Diplomacy of His Country, Lobanoff's Successor Has the Traditional Russian Dislike For England and Germany and Affection For France.

In picking out his new minister of foreign affairs the young czar of Russia has chosen a man who is probably the best equipped to carry out the policy which the late Alexander III handed down to his son and which Nicholas is dutifully pursuing. Count Muraviev, who has been recalled from his post at Berlin to take charge of the foreign relations of the czar, has one quality which Nicholas appreciates most of all in those who serve him. That is reticence. The new minister of foreign affairs knows when to say nothing. Of course such knowledge is useful in all walks of life, but to the diplomat it is almost indispensable.

Count Michael Muraviev is 53 years old and therefore fully matured mentally as well as physically. He is tall, dresses with exquisite neatness and taste and is as much addicted to the wearing of a monocle as is Joseph Chamberlain. It is a singular coincidence that the heads of the foreign offices of two such great European powers as England and Russia should each affect the single eyeglass.

Nothing will be more agreeable to Count Muraviev than to reiterate to the ambassadors sent by the German kaiser to St. Petersburg that Russia regards Germany with a constantly suspicious eye, for the count does not love the kaiser. There are several reasons for this, one of them being that when Alexander III decided to cut loose from Germany he sent the news by Count Muraviev, who, as the bearer of bad tidings, was not received with much cordiality. Moreover, he had served at Paris under Prince Orloff, and the Berlin court seemed extremely dull to him after his stay at the brilliant French capital.

Count Muraviev belongs to one of the most aristocratic and influential families in Russia, and he brings to the office a social prestige equal to that of his immediate predecessor, the late Count Lobanoff. His is not an old title.

LYMAN J. GAGE.

came a merchant in a small way. There Lyman went to school until he was 14, when, as there was a large family, he started out to make his own living. He was first employed as a clerk in a country postoffice. Seeing little hope of advancement, however, he left the employ of Uncle Sam and entered the Omaha Central bank at Omaha. He began his career as a banker in a very humble way. His position was that of office boy and junior clerk. His salary for the first year was $100. He waited another half year for a raise, but when it was refused he resigned. He had the western fever, and he started for Chicago.

With very little money, no friends and one or two useless letters of introduction in his pocket he tramped for many weary days about the streets of the young metropolis of the west. But young Gage did not go to Chicago to starve. Failing to get a situation in a bank, he took a job in a lumber yard, and for more than a year worked as a lumber "shover." Then he was promoted. He was made night watchman. Next he was taken into the office and made bookkeeper. A change in the firm displaced him, however, and he once more went to handling lumber.

All this time he kept haunting the banks and asking for a position. Finally one bright day in 1858 he happened into the Merchants' Savings, Loan and Trust company just when a bookkeeper was needed, and he was engaged at a salary of $500 a year. In six months he was made paying teller and later assistant cashier. He remained with this bank for ten years and then went to the First National bank to fill a similar position. Since then his progress upward has been steady. In 1882 he was made vice president of the First National, and he was promoted to the presidency in 1891.

During the more than 40 years of Mr. Gage's residence in Chicago he has come to be recognized as a public spirited citizen in the full sense of that much abused term. Generally he has appeared in the role of a harmonizer. On more than one occasion his calm, conservative judgment has been a needed leaven in the midst of a crowd of impetuous, hot headed enthusiasts. Of this nature were his services in connection with the World's fair, and he is credited with having saved that great enterprise from being wrecked in a storm of angry conflict between the national commissioners and the local directors, of whose board he served as president. The list of his other public services is too long to enumerate.

Personally Mr. Gage is a tall man, whose commanding figure would be imposing were it not for the kindly light which glows from his eyes and his mild but congenial manner of address. He is a lover of good living and occupies a large, comfortable mansion on North State street. He has recently learned to ride a bicycle, and he is fond of a game of whist and a night at the theater.

His wife was Miss Cornelia Lansing, and she was born in Albany. She is tall and of distinguished appearance. Mrs. Gage likes society, and the dinners which she gives in her crimson hung dining room are among the most enjoyable events to which Chicago society people are invited. She also rides a bicycle and is almost as good a whist player as her husband.

Deafness Cannot be Cured by local applications as they cannot reach the diseased portion of the ear. There is only one way to cure deafness, and that is by constitutional remedies. Deafness is caused by an inflamed condition of the mucous lining of the Eustachian Tube. When this tube is inflamed you have a rumbling sound of imperfect hearing, and when it is entirely closed, Deafness is the result, and unless the inflammation can be taken out and this tube restored to its normal condition, hearing will be destroyed forever; nine cases out of ten are caused by catarrh, which is nothing but an inflamed condition of the mucous surfaces. Deafness is caused by an inflamed condition of the mucous lining of the Eustachian Tube. When this tube is inflamed you have a rumbling sound of imperfect hearing, and when it is entirely closed, Deafness is the result, and unless the inflammation can be taken out and this tube restored to its normal condition, hearing will be destroyed forever; nine cases out of ten are caused by catarrh, which is nothing but an inflamed condition of the mucous surfaces. We will give One Hundred Dollars

Deafness Cannot be Cured by local applications as they cannot reach the diseased portion of the ear. There is only one way to cure deafness, and that is by constitutional remedies.
